

My Daughter's party included 17 children from ages 2 ½ to 8 yrs old. Some of those children may have been part of an inclusion program with special needs... and while we don't necessarily know who those children are and what their needs may be... all children were invited from my daughter's class and I suspect that some of those that had attended were part of the inclusion program. Not only did your party engage my daughter and her peers for the hour and the half, but it also maintained the interest of the 2-½ year old and the special needs children, that may have attended, for the "entire" presentation. All children participated and enjoyed the hands on experiment. In fact, my daughter reports that one of the children brought their "goo" in the next day to show her friends.

Many parents have approached me after the party to compliment me on this original party idea, appreciating the science theme and commenting on how it engaged the children for the full hour and half.

Thanks! "Mad Science" team and Claudio!!!!
