Dear Mrs. Alfieri

I am one of the students that learned about the interesting world of pollution. I would like to tell you what I liked about this experience.

I learned that oil spills are very important to clean up. Oil spills are important because animals die every day in the ocean, and on land. Does it happen a lot? I hate to see animals die because of our mistakes. I can't stop thinking how and why we do this.

Air pollution scares me because it can hurt people, as well as animals. Do we ever have a chance to stop it? I mean air pollution happens every day.

I also learned that animals are affected. I want to know how they clean them. It is not the animals' fault. Animals get caught in the middle of pollution. Littering is the number one reason animals die. They usually eat the plastic soda or beer rings.

Thank you for teaching us about how pollution doesn't just happen on land. We will try to be more careful.

Sincerely,

Emily Rolston
